United, Continental and Frontier Add or Up Baggage Fees

Airlines continue to try to deal with high oil prices by upping or adding baggage fees. United Airlines has doubled the fee for the second checked bag to $50 from $25 one way, unless you're flying in United First or United Business, have Premier status with United or Star Alliance, or are active duty military personnel traveling on orders. United estimates that the $50 service fee will apply to one out of seven customers. Customers may pay these service fees at an airport Easy Check-In kiosk or with a skycap. Ultimately, United aims to give customers the option of paying these baggage fees online. Continental now charges you $15 for the first checked bag unless you're traveling First, BusinessFirst or full fare economy. OnePass Elite and SkyTeam Elite First and military personnel are exempt. Frontier Airlines will begin charging $15 for your first checked bag and $25 for the second, starting Nov. 1. The Department of Transportation estimates that the aviation industry collected $182.6 million in excess baggage fees in the second quarter of 2008, up from $122.3 million in the first quarter and $113.0 million in the second quarter of 2007. Delta Introduces Two-Class Shuttle Service

Delta Air Lines will offer two-class Shuttle service with 12 seats in First Class and 128 in Economy, keeping its open-seating policy for each class. Sky Miles Medallion members qualify for upgrades. During November, there may be a mix of one- and two-class Shuttle aircraft as Delta reconfigures its nine MD 88 Shuttle aircraft (Source: Delta news release).

If You Can Afford It, There's More Room in the Front of the Plane on International flights

The numbers of international premium class travelers actually dropped in July, according to the International Air Traffic Association. Some of these travelers have probably moved to the back of the plane, but the sharp decline in premium travel also reflects a fall in business travel due to the increasing weakness of major economies. Most of the drops were in markets connected with Asia, but cross-border European numbers also shrank. South America and markets connected to the Middle East and Africa did the best. Economy class continued to grow, but even that pace slowed sharply to just 0.9 percent in July, following a 3.4 percent growth in June and 4.6 percent for the first half of the year. IATA's August figures shows that international air travel growth overall is continuing to decline. After growing by 5.4 percent in the first half of the year, it slowed to 1.9 percent and July and 1.3 percent in August. (Source: IATA press releases)
